

Kenneth B. Morris to serve as 2012 graduation speaker

On June 7, 2012, at 10 a.m. at Howard University's Cramton Auditorium in Washington, D.C., Washington Math Science Technology (WMST) Public Charter High School's Class of 2012 will graduate.

Kenneth B. Morris, Jr., great-great-great grandson of Frederick Douglass and the great-great grandson of Booker T. Washington, will serve as the 2012 graduation speaker.

Since 2007, Mr. Morris has served as the president of the Frederick Douglass Family Foundation (FDF), a non-profit that seeks to create a modern Abolitionist Movement in schools all over the country through the vehicle of Service-Learning.

Experts in the field of human trafficking and modern-day slavery agree that building awareness is the first step to ending slavery in our time. FDF operates on the belief that students can best communicate the message of abolition via the Internet and their extraordinary online social networks.

Prior to working at FDF, Ken co-managed C&A Marketing and became a leader in the field of corporate meetings and incentive travel developing customized marketing programs for major cruise lines and resort hotels. One can read more about Mr. Morris' professional background here.
